

The Small Business Development Center Program (SBDC) is a national program that offers the entrepreneur access to a wide range of services and resources designed to meet their unique business needs. The program provides entrepreneurs with technical assistance and business training at each stage of business development. The financial resources of the SBA are leveraged with investments made by governments, academic hosts, as well as other community and business partnerships in order to provide the services of the SBDC.

The University of California Merced SBDC Regional network is nationally accredited that serves a 15-county area in Central California. The data below demonstrates the positive economic impact of this program.
