"Moving the Earth for Women"

Buckley Construction Co., Inc. is a women owned, family operated construction company that operates in Sheridan, Wyoming, and around the State of Wyoming. Founded in 1989 by Rosie and Sam Buckley and incorporated in 1996, its primary function is excavation and utility work. The company has been certified as a disadvantaged business enterprise \(DBE\) by the State of Wyoming and certified as an 8\(a\) firm by the Small Business Administration.

The company expanded its operation to include street and highway projects, concrete projects, environmental projects, preparation for asphalt and concrete paving projects, demolition projects, light carpentry projects, landscaping projects and snow removal. Clientele include federal, state and local governments, commercial, residential and agricultural customers, school districts, and coal mines.

Rosie Buckley has expertise in all phases of utility work and gained that expertise as an outside sales person for a wholesale plumping supply house. She manages all administrative operations and has learned to do so with hands-on experience. Sam Buckley has expertise in all phases of construction and gained his expertise as a construction worker, equipment operator and crane foreman for 20 years and worked for his father as a construction worker when he was growing up. Jason McGill, Rosie's son and Sam Buckley's stepson, is a superintendent for the company running all field operations. Jason, 22 years old, has worked for the company since he was 13 in all phases of the organization. Rosie and Sam hope that Jason will take the company over in time and teach his family the business. The general superintendent, Pat Greenough, is 63 years old and has worked in construction, ranching and stock dog training his entire life. He has been with Buckley Construction for eight years. Harry Clark is project foreman who runs the forest service projects in the Big Horn Mountains has been with them for nine years. They like to hire young people fresh out of high school and train them with great success.

Buckley Construction has bid on, and fulfilled, numerous projects for private entities, prime contractor's, the Wyoming Department of transportation, municipalities and Federal Agencies. The company has done numerous federal projects as an 8\(a\) firm for the Forest Service and the Veterans Administration. Their greatest accomplishment was the Medicine Wheel project where they replaced the fence around the wheel, built walking paths and will complete the new parking lot in the coming summer. They satisfied numerous Indian American groups and the Forest Service by respecting the fact that the wheel and the surrounding area is historical. Most of the work was done by hand as they did not want to disturb any ancient artifacts.

Buckley Construction Co., Inc. prides itself as being honest, fair and demonstrates integrity when working for anyone. They continue to strive to give customers the best possible product at a fair and equitable price and have many repeat customers and many referrals from satisfied customers.
