Business and Trade Association Leaders to Participate in Second National Regulatory Fairness Hearing

WASHINGTON - The Office of the National Ombudsman at the U.S. Small Business Administration will host its second national regulatory fairness hearing in Washington D.C. on March 12, at 10 a.m. This event, which will be held at the Environmental Protection Agency's East Building, will give leaders from business organizations and trade associations an opportunity to comment on unfair or excessive federal regulatory enforcement that impacts their members and small businesses nationwide.

"The first national hearing was a great success, as groups explained the challenges their small business members face when trying to comply with regulations within their respective industries," said SBA National Ombudsman Nicholas Owens.

"We would like to build upon last year's hearing, and continue to successfully identify those federal regulatory enforcement actions that are excessive — rather than effective — for small businesses across the nation," Owens said.

The national hearing will also function as an information session on how SBA's Office of the National Ombudsman serves as troubleshooter for the nation's small businesses. "We'd like the representatives, on behalf of their associations' members, to come away with a better understanding of how the National Ombudsman is a vital resource for America's small business owners," Owens said.

The Small Business Regulatory Enforcement Fairness Act of 1996 created the Office of the National Ombudsman within the SBA and established 10 regional regulatory fairness boards nationwide.

Each year a series of public regulatory fairness hearings are held around the country. These hearings are usually chaired by the National Ombudsman and regional board members and attended by officials from various federal regulatory agencies. During the hearings, small business owners have an opportunity to testify in person, presenting their concerns about unfair practices or burdensome policies imposed on them by federal agencies, without fear of retaliatory action. Business owners also have the option of submitting their comments in writing to the National Ombudsman.

The upcoming national hearing will follow a similar format. During a typical regional hearing, comments from business owners are forwarded to the appropriate federal agency for their review. The National Ombudsman asks the federal agency to respond within a specified time period. In many instances, the federal agency has reduced or waived particular penalties and/or compliance actions. At a minimum, the agencies direct a high-level review of the enforcement action to ensure fairness. Comments from the national hearing will also be included in the National Ombudsman's annual report to Congress, which rates federal agencies on responsiveness to small business concerns.
